So let's not waste any time and find out the best offline anime love story games. Eldarya is an intriguing, exciting, and over-the-top anime-style love story. Here only you decide what the plot will be and what the characters will do. To observe the relationship, connect your character with another character. Anything can happen in the game world, be prepared to be surprised and have fun with what is happening. But don't forget that only your decisions determine the end of the story. The controls are so simple that even a child can figure it out. You may also like: 11 Best Anime Simulation Games for Android & iOS Create your own, unique love story in the game My Candy Love. The scenario of the game is completely built based on your decisions. Meet different characters, communicate with them, and try to seduce them. It's not easy to evoke reciprocal feelings, but you'll have to try and do it, and the dialogues will help. Read them carefully, and remember that the development of the plot depends on them. You can choose a character to your liking, you can even choose the sign of the zodiac. The outfit can be changed at any time, depending on the needs. Enjoy different episodes and different endings. Mr. Love: Queen's Choice is a top-rated romance simulation game where you play as a media producer who gets to become deeply involved with four different guys. You can text and chat with them and even receive phone calls from your love interests that you can listen to in Japanese or their English dubbing. There are multiple chapters in the game, and surprising plot twists in store for those who continue to play and progress through the story. The game creators even enlisted popular voice actors to bring their handsome paramours to life, so don't be surprised if you hear someone who sounds familiar. 1492 Studio is the maker of the Is It Love? series that lets players be the main character of their own romantic story. Each game focuses on one love interest, and one of the most popular stories of the series has to be Is It Love? Drogo - Vampire. Players get to live out their own Vampire Diaries and Twilight fantasies as they find themselves as the au pair for the youngest of the Bartholy, the little sister of Drogo. It's free to play with the option of making in-game purchases for bonus points. Love Tangle - Shall We Date is one of the many games from the company NTT Solmare. Love Tangle puts players in the shoes of the main character, a credited scientist and researcher who comes to live in an apartment for celebrities. For the most part, it follows the standard mechanics of most "otome games" (Japanese games targeted at women), but what sets Love Tangle apart is that players get to romance two characters at the same time in each route, as they're caught in a fierce love triangle. Mystic Messenger is a Korean mobile romance game that came out in 2016. Here, players take on the role of the main character who stumbles upon an app that lets them interact with the members of a group known as the RFA. Players interact with the characters through chats, texts, and phone calls (fully voiced in Korean) in real-time. Chatrooms and phone calls work on Korean Standard Time so players in different time zones might find it hard to keep up with them. But missed chats can be unlocked using hourglasses purchased in-game. Once you have downloaded the app, you will be transferred to the home page. Tap on the large playback button to select a necessary level and launch the game. Moving on, you can customize the character as you wish. For example, you can add accessories, adjust the appearance, choose a preferred outfit, etc. As you play, you will have to take various actions that will impact further developments. Be ready to overcome assorted obstacles by choosing between an old friend and the coolest guy at school. Overall, the game combines a fabulous plot, amazing graphics, and a clear interface. For a romance game full of magic and mystery The Arcana is a great fit. Players take on the role of a magician in the fantasy land of Versuvia. There they find themselves investigating the mysterious circumstances surrounding the murder of Versuvia's count, using their skills of the Arcana to unravel the truth. There are six routes available with 22 books in each route, based on the 22 Major Arcana of a tarot deck. Players can unlock special scenes with coins, but it's completely optional and has no effect on the outcome of the story. Picture this, you just managed to get your dream job as a fashion designer and you're over the moon. However, by a strange twist of fate, you suddenly find yourself getting hurled back in time into an alternate history. Ikemen Sengoku takes players to Japan's Sengoku Era where she must survive three months in. But she won't be alone. She'll be with some of Japan's most famous historical figures such as Nobunaga Oda and Masamune Date. A lot can happen in three months but if she wants to go home, she must not fall in love with anyone. The game is developed by Cybird, a company known for producing otome games. Ikemen Sengoku is one of their most famous works that have been adapted into anime, manga, and even stage plays. Completing the list is another game from Cybird. Midnight Cinderella follows the story of a commoner who suddenly becomes the princess of a fictional country called Wysteria. The player character will need to adjust to their new life as a royal while learning how to rule the country. Aside from that, they are faced with another challenge. They must find a prince who will rule the country beside them. While such a task may seem challenging, you are then presented with nine prince candidates who you must choose from to rule beside you. You can only pick one of them to become your prince, so choose wisely. Immerse in a fairytale world of carriages, balls, and gowns as you search for your happy ending. Here users can enjoy superior gameplay and create a fantastic love story. When you first open the app, click on the large playback button and choose the game part you want to start with. Users can find an integrated Wardrobe option top left of the screen. Press there to customize the appearance of your character - e.g. hairstyle, outfit, face features, etc. There are not any improper actions, as all the things you do will create your unique storyline. Take risks, meet fascinating characters, and immerse in the magnificent world of love! As for the game's interface, it is quite straightforward. It comes with excellent visuals and impressive graphics. The joint was not exactly jumping as 6 o'clock rolled around, the hour that the Ford Fusion Speed Dating event was to get under way. A mere handful of the 120 mostly young professionals who had signed up and had trickled into the Cafeteria, a modern deco night club in Miami's South Beach neighborhood. The Ford people, clad in black T-shirts with the word Fusion printed boldly in silver lettering, were pacing a bit nervously. By 6:30, most of the 45 eventual participants, all Miami-based subscribers to the Internet dating site Match.com, had arrived, and the Fusion marketing launch manager, Jyarland Daniels Jones, a svelte 31-year-old African American woman, finally got the proceedings going. "When your number is called, you will be escorted to the car," Jones told the assembled speed daters, who were standing around munching hors d'oeuvres. The numbers were pulled from a hat and corresponded to numbers inside a heart on a Ford Fusion key chain that each speed dater received on arrival. "You will have seven minutes to spend getting to know that person who is sitting next to you in the front seat of the 2006 Ford Fusion, and I would encourage you at the conclusion, if you have any questions, to go to Fordvehicles.com." For those who have missed it, speed dating is designed to hasten mate finding. Typically, speed daters receive dance cards that shift them from table to table and partner to partner roughly every seven minutes, in order to meet about eight potential partners an hour. The theory behind speed dating, described at length in the book Blink by New Yorker writer Malcolm Gladwell, is that it can take just seconds to determine whether the person across the table from you might be a match. Speed dating seems a natural evolution of the sex-based auto advertising that dates to early in the past century. It is also a fitting promotion of a machine that the 1929 book Middletown: A Study in Modern American Culture says encouraged pairing among high-school students in lieu of group excursions and that has generally abetted sexual liberation since the days of the Duryea. The authors say that another problem, much discussed by Middletown parents, [is] the increasing relaxation of some of the traditional prohibitions upon the approaches of boys and girls to each other's persons. In 1890, a well-brought-up boy and girl were commonly forbidden to sit together in the dark; but motion pictures and the automobile have lifted this taboo." But if sex and horseless carriages have gone together for more than a century - with apologies to Frank Sinatra - speed dating and marketing meshed more awkwardly in Miami. The encounters took place in 10 Fusions parked outside the Cafeteria. That limited the number of people who could speed-date at any given moment to less than half the participants, leaving the rest to mingle, or not. Many speed daters didn't seem to mind - perhaps because most had never done it before. Some were enthusiastic. One speed-dating couple even danced inside the car. "We were blasting the radio," said Vanessa, a 37-year-old who works in an agency dealing with foster children. "We're here because we thought it would be fun," said Tatiana Lora, 22, the public-relations coordinator at Miami Living magazine, who came with a friend. Although she wasn't smitten by anyone, "I met great people, so definitely I would do it again in a heartbeat," she said. A few of the speed daters even found what they were looking for. Halfway through the event, Melvin and Adriana, in their early 20s, were already entwined. But Carson Kievman, a 50-year-old composer and university professor, complained that there was a dearth of women, that most were young enough to be his daughter, and that he had only one speed date. Nonetheless, he found that speed dating "is kind of fun in a bizarre way." Speed dating might seem an ineffective way to sell cars - even assuming Ford gets the bugs out - given the small number of people who would have attended the event even if everyone had shown up. And except for a certain voyeuristic car magazine, what little press there was was strictly local. But Ford Fusion Speed Dating is well-targeted, says launch manager Jones. The ideal customer is "a Gen Xer, 25 to 39 years old. One of the many things they engage in is dating, and we know that speed dating has had tremendous success." And the car, she says, "makes a wonderful first impression." Moreover, the venue enables extensive repetition of the marketing mantra. "Think of the number of times I say '2006 Ford Fusion,'" says Jones. Then there's the benefit of hands-on, or body-in. "I heard one tall young woman say, 'I could fit in that car. I didn't think I'd be able to,'" says Jones. "Invariably, these individuals will tell their friends about the experience, and the Ford Fusion will come up somewhere in that conversation." Women, she says, referring to a Time, Inc., study, typically choose products that have been talked up by friends or family. For the Fusion, there's another reason to go with edgy marketing. "These types of activities enable us to attract a younger consumer, because the reality is, for that younger consumer we are not at the very top of that shopping list," Jones admits. Reaching that audience also requires understanding that the car, says Jones, "is how you communicate who you are to the rest of the world." (In that case, this writer had better trade his Accord for a '60 Valiant.) The Fusion's target customer, she says, "wants to be expressive." The mind-set: "I am different, and oh, by the way, I'm okay with standing out." But then she hedges: "There is some level of risk taking, but not too much, because I do have practical needs." Jones compares the Fusion to the offerings at Target. "Target coined the term 'cheap chic,'" she says. So although that comparison underscores that the Fusion is no 427 - the Fusion's concept-car progenitor that hearkens back to the bold, muscular automotive personalities of the '60s - it is one of the most striking sedans out there. The Fusion daters seemed to like it. "It looks nice," says Rudolph, a nattily dressed 33-year-old African American man who came to Miami from New York and Philadelphia. "It kind of reminds me of an Accord." "I would recommend it," says Vanessa. "But I already have a car that I enjoy, a Toyota Camry. It's very comparable." "We were too busy steaming up the back seat to [pay much attention to the car]," said Jonathan Lledo, in his early 20s. Still, he noted that "the physical appearance is much better than the older model." (Okay, so he probably means the Taurus.) "What's new about it?" Kievman asked rhetorically. "Nothing that I could see. What's being fused? A VW Jetta and a Chevy Nova?" Maybe that's why Ford dressed up the event in the emperor's clothes. Ford conducted a dating survey, timing its release to coincide with the speed-dating event, offering such revelations as: 69 percent of women said their date's car's condition would have some influence on their attraction, and that the "most embarrassing car-date moment" for both genders was being accused of being a bad driver. Ford also enlisted the authors of The Rules, a bestselling book of old-fashioned advice for women on how to land a man, to concoct some rules for dating in cars, and repeatedly encouraged this reporter to interview them (he declined). For women, for example: "Having car trouble? Play the damsel in distress and let him handle it." For guys: "Keep your hands on the wheel." (The advice ladies did not attend the event.) "They're doing it for image awareness, pure and simple," says Peter DeLorenzo, publisher of Autoextremist.com, of the speed-dating event. "Automakers have an almost addictive compulsion to chase 'hipness.' There is nothing more unhip than a car company chasing hipness." These critiques notwithstanding, several experts agreed with Jones that speed dating is a reasonable way to promote cars. Television time is exorbitant, says Christina Brown, a marketing professor at the University of Michigan. "A 30-second spot on a top-rated network television show can go for as much as $500,000." Furthermore, "If you put an ad on the air, 90 percent of the people may not even be in the target demographic," but the advertiser still has to pay for them, she says. To add insult to injury, those in the target demographic - young adults - are especially inclined to zap ads or TiVo them out, says Brown. Reaching a target audience is not the simple task it was even 5 or 10 years ago, says Scott Schoessel, vice-president of sales and new-business development at Gigunda Group, an experiential marketing agency in Manchester, New Hampshire, who was not involved in the Fusion's promotion. Between the number of television channels and the number of models, it's hard to get people's attention, he says. Not surprisingly, then, event-based marketing is booming. U.S. spending climbed 15 percent from 2002 to 2003, to $152 billion, according to an article at ChiefMarketer.com. A great example of the genre is the toilet-paper company Charmin's "Potty Palooza" campaign, says Gigunda Group's Schoessel. It's hard to imagine a delicate way to promote such a product. Charmin did so by designing portable bathroom stalls to be comfortable, as well as clean, and trucking them to public festivals. Festival-goers voted with their behinds, forming half-hour lines at the Charmin stalls while the other portables went neglected. Ford Fusion Speed Dating - there's that mantra, again - is not the first example of automotive event-based marketing. U-M professor Brown recalls seeing a parade of two dozen multicolored New Beetles when the car first came out in the late '90s. "You can believe people talked about it," she says. In another example, Mini Coopers were attached to the tops of Ford Excursions. "Mercedes and Match.com even held a speed-dating event similar to the Fusion's, except that couples actually got to drive the car," says Jean Halliday, Detroit bureau chief for Advertising Age. (One woman was turned off by a partner's aggressive driving, according to an account on Match.com.) "With event marketing, you have a better shot at converting more of the few," Schoessel concludes. "My perspective is that this sort of approach is becoming much, much more of a necessity than it was several years ago."
